Clinical Grand Round

Date : 10.01.2026
Day : Saturday

Time: 08:30 AM – 09:30 AM
Venue: Adi-Kailash Auditorium
(Near - Emergency Building)

First 10-minute Topic: “Non-Invasive Brain Stimulation (NIBS)”

Presenter: Dr. Deepak Goel, Professor & Head, Neurology
 Department of Neurology

Topic: “Bridging the Silos: Multidisciplinary Pathways for Managing Rare Adrenal Malignancies”

Abstract: Adrenal tumors comprise a diverse spectrum of pathologies, among which malignant pheochromocytoma and primary adrenal lymphoma (PAL) are rare but clinically important entities. Malignant pheochromocytomas originate from chromaffin cells and are characterized by catecholamine hypersecretion, aggressive behavior, and metastatic potential, with malignancy defined by the presence of distant metastases. In contrast, primary adrenal lymphoma is an uncommon extra-nodal lymphoma, most often diffuse large B-cell type, frequently presenting with bilateral adrenal involvement and adrenal insufficiency, and typically lacking hormonal activity. Diagnosis of these lesions is challenging due to nonspecific imaging findings; biochemical evaluation is central to pheochromocytoma, while primary adrenal lymphoma requires histopathological confirmation. Functional imaging plays an important role in localization and staging. Management strategies differ substantially, with surgical resection and systemic therapies forming the cornerstone of treatment for malignant pheochromocytoma, whereas adrenal lymphoma is primarily managed with systemic chemotherapy. Early recognition and multidisciplinary management are essential to optimize outcomes in these uncommon adrenal malignancies.
